Past performance is not necessarily indicative of future performance. Unit prices and investment returns may go down, as well as up.

The basis of calculating and assumption made in calculating the returns:

Percentage Growth = $\frac{N^1-N^2}{N^2}$ x 100

 N^1 = NAV on the end of the period

 N^2 = NAV on the beginning of the period

* Average Total Return = $\frac{\text{Total Sub Period Returns}}{\text{Number of Sub Periods}}$

Annual Total Return = $(1 + Cumulative Return)^{N^3/N^4} - 1$

N³ = Number of periods per year

N⁴ = Total number of periods

Factor in for unit splits and distributions paid out (if any during the period)

Market Review

United States (US) stocks fell in February 2025 amid some softer economic data and worries over the potential impact of trade tariffs on the US economy. The weakest sectors were consumer discretionary and communication services. Another factor that led to the detraction was concerns over the sustainability of earnings from US mega cap tech stocks, especially those exposed to the artificial intelligence theme. Personal consumption expenditure (PCE) fell 0.2% in January 2025 – this was the first negative reading in nearly two years. This adds to the uncertainty that surrounds trade tariffs and the fear that tariffs could cause inflation to increase. United Kingdom (UK) equities also rose in February 2025, led by large cap banks, defence companies and big pharma names. In response to the growing European security threat, Prime Minister Starmer announced an increase in defence spending to 2.5% of Gross Domestic Product (GDP) by 2027. This added to fears that taxes might rise again, raising concerns about the UK's fiscal outlook. Positively, UK avoided US tariffs, given the lack of trade deficit with the US. European shares outperformance was led by financials amid robust corporate earnings from banks. European defence stocks also benefitted from a renewed focus on domestic production. The reshuffling of the geopolitical blocks is putting Ukraine at the forefront of the European debate, and major defence investments are expected to be announced in the coming weeks. Japanese equities declined in February 2025 due to several factors including continued concern over Trump's tariffs on US imports and speculation over Bank of Japan (BOJ) interest rate hikes led to volatility.

Market Outlook And Investment Strategy

The recent sell-off could imply further market volatility ahead as investors contend with more policy uncertainty from the White House. Monetary policy in the eurozone is expected to be more accommodative than monetary policy in the US going forward. Although corporate earnings revisions in Europe are still negative, earnings momentum has been trending higher. More so, the fiscal impulse in Europe is set to significantly increase as European countries start to increase spending. This could mean both higher European government bond yields and a stronger Euro this year. In Japan, BOJ continues to be on a tightening policy as growth normalises which has caused the Japanese yen (JPY) to appreciate. With higher interest rates back home, Japanese domestic investors could be swayed to repatriate their savings to domestic bonds and the local equity market.

The structural growth areas that are changing the way we live, work, communicate and conquer disease – things like e-commerce, cloud software, medical diagnostics, life sciences tools, digital payments, and immune-oncology are once-in-a-generation changes, and the market underestimates the sustainability of the structural potential of the leading companies in these areas. We remain holders of businesses with deeply embedded advantages, operating in the ecosystems mentioned above. The portfolio holds 39 positions, with the top 10 holdings comprising more than 25% of assets. Virtually the portfolio is held in the Healthcare, Consumer Discretionary, Communication Services, Information Technology and Financials sectors. The portfolio is well positioned for a cost of capital world, which has been absent for much of the last decade. The holdings are not dependent on free or cheap money to finance themselves. Winners will hinge less on whether they are labelled as growth or value and more on how they develop and execute against their opportunities. The Invesco Global Focus strategy is a high-conviction portfolio applying a bottom-up approach to stock selection. Consistent, long-term outperformance, we believe, can best be achieved by investing within select long-term thematic trends or tailwinds. A growing ecosystem with some advantaged participants is a good starting point for security level research, and that is where we direct our efforts. We manage a high active share portfolio, with what we believe are asymmetric return profiles.
